Metro | Ottawa

Members of the black community in Ottawa are calling on police officers to leave their uniform at home if they plan on walking in the Capital Pride parade next month — a move the police union has criticized as “prejudicial.”

Leila Moumouni, a member of Black Diaspora, said police officers should come to the parade, but only in plainclothes. The uniform, she said, is a symbol of an “oppressive” institution that black people have feared for years.

“Be there as yourself, but you don’t need to be as a representation of an oppressive institution. It doesn’t need to be that. For me at least, I don’t understand the need for people who work in the police to be in uniform to celebrate Pride,” said Moumouni.

On Thursday, Ottawa Capital Pride held a media launch to announce details of the week-long events leading up to the Aug. 21 parade.

Capital Pride chair Tammy

Dopson said she is monitoring what Pride groups in other cities are doing in relation to police presence and will consult with Ottawa police and the black community in the weeks ahead.

The activist group Black Lives Matter Toronto brought the Pride parade in that city to a halt and asked that police floats be excluded. In St. John’s, the police are being asked to not wear their uniforms in the parade.

“What I can say is that we have no intentions of making exclusion a part of inclusion. It obviously doesn’t fit. Exclusion is not inclusion and our festival is an inclusive one,” said Dopson. “We’re looking at what other Prides are doing, we’re going to be taking everything they do as a cue for how we will move forward, but no formal position yet.”

Matt Skof, president of the Ottawa Police Association, said he is disappointed by the group’s efforts to dictate police presence at the parade, and called their demands “destructive.”

“It is so prejudicial to a group that is provided their mandate by society that by the colour of their uniform should be told that they are not to wear it or it may cause an issue,” said Skof.

“To me, this has moved into the realm of bigotry. I do not accept a group trying to hijack what is clearly the most inclusive community event in our society, which is the gay Pride parade.

THINGS TO DO IN OTTAWA THIS WEEKEND

Make waffle cones and drink Shakespearian tea or get outside for fun and games this weekend.

Haley Ritchie
Metro | Ottawa

1 Shakespeare Tea

This year marks 400 years since Shakespeare's death. This weekend, for $20 per person, you can celebrate the life of the classic author and enjoy a three-tier tea service at the Billings Estate. Servers will be dressed in period-appropriate costume and actors will perform famous acts from the various works of Shakespeare. Reservations are required and available from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. by calling 613-247-4830 ext. 221. Sunday

2 Free Ontario Parks

Ontario Parks are waiving their fees this weekend for one day only. If you want to stay local head to Fitzroy Provincial Park in the west or Rideau River Provincial Park in south. If you're up for a road trip you've got more options — including Algonquin Park and Bon Echo Park. Friday

3 Ice Cream Festival

Yes, you get to eat ice cream this weekend — but you'll be learning while you do it! The Canadian Agriculture and Food Museum (at the Experimental Farm) is inviting people of all ages to enjoy a tasty treat and learn about dairy from 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Learn how to make ice cream, milkshakes and waffle cones and enjoy wagon rides, live music and four local ice cream makers who will be selling their delicious products (including vegan ice cream!). Entry to the museum is $10 for adults and $7 for children. Sunday

4 HOPE Volleyball

Ottawa's biggest beach volleyball tournament returns this weekend. Prepare for sun, sand and a ton of money being raised for some great local charities. If you're not participating you can still head down to Mooney's Bay to see some live music. Tickets are $15 to see headliners Hey Rosetta!, Dear Rouge and the Elwins. Good luck to the thousands of players and volunteers that will be participating on 86 courts using 162 volleyballs. Saturday

5 Ghanafest

If you're looking for a taste of Ghana this weekend, head to Brewer Park all day on Saturday from 11:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. The Ghanaian Association of Ottawa will be hosting a family-friendly party in the park with traditional food, clothing, crafts, art and drinks. Activities (with prizes) include soccer, tug of war, a three-legged race and board games. Saturday

MOBILE APP

Shyft in location pays off for former Ottawa entrepreneur

Jacob Serebrin
Ottawa Business Journal

An Ottawa native is hoping to make it big south of the border thanks to a new mobile app startup that has just landed $1.5 million in venture capital.

Brett Patrntasch is the founder and CEO of Shyft, an app producer now based in Seattle. The app is intended to help hourly workers at fast-food restaurants, retailers and cafés trade shifts.

"Shyft connects workers directly with others at their location and lets them quickly and easily exchange and cover shifts," Mr. Patrntasch said in a recent interview.

He said the investment will allow the company to hire people for key positions and drive growth.

"Now we're just working on growing the business," he added.

The seed-stage investment was led by Seattle-based Madrona Venture Group and also included several angel investors — most notably former Ottawa mayor Larry O'Brien. Before going into politics, Mr. O'Brien was the founder and CEO of Calian Technologies.

"Larry definitely brings a skill set and experience both in understanding how labour forces work and also how technology products work and scale," Mr. Patrntasch said.

Also investing in the round was former Seattle Seahawks offensive lineman Russell Okung, who recently signed with the Super Bowl-champion Denver Broncos.

Mr. Patrntasch relocated Shyft to Seattle in March to attend Techstars, a startup accelerator program.

Before that, the company had been based in Toronto.

He said the Techstars program helped speed the company's growth. When the program ended in May, Mr. Patrntasch decided to stay in Seattle.

"The U.S. economy is larger," he explained. "There's more access to opportunities."

But it's not just the country, it's the city itself, he added.

"Seattle's typically been a great tech market," Mr. Patrntasch said.

RedBlacks practices get noisy

Emma Jackson
Metro | Ottawa

It's a quiet Monday afternoon in the Glebe: no concerts scheduled, no rowdy sports fans clogging up the side streets.

But then your ears detect the unmistakable sounds of cheering, booing, hooting and hollering.

What on earth?

You are not crazy: what you're hearing is a RedBlacks practice, complete with noise simulation to help players perform under pressure.

"It is especially helpful to prepare for playing in front of a large and loud crowd," said Graeme Ivory, spokesperson for Ottawa Sports and Entertainment Group.

All teams do this.

Graeme Ivory, Ottawa Sports and Entertainment Group

That's exactly what they'll face when they head west to face the Saskatchewan Roughriders on July 22, he said.

The practice is not all that unusual. Ivory said "all teams do this" and the RedBlacks fake their screaming crowds about once a week.

Coun. David Chernushenko joked in his newsletter last week that TD Place doesn't need to practice: "Isn't there enough real noise coming from Lansdowne?" he asked.

Company will be allowed to register late as a lobbyist: City

Joe Lofaro
Metro | Ottawa

After a bumpy start, Sinking Ship Entertainment is trying to move past the kerfuffle with what is being dubbed Ottawa's controversial playground at Mooney's Bay Park, the first phase of which was unveiled during a sneak peek Thursday.

The production company partnered with the City of Ottawa to build the playground — soon to be the largest in Canada — in time for the country's 150th anniversary.

The park will be divided into sections representing a Canadian province or territory upon its completion later this summer and will be part of TVO's children's television series, Giver.

The company, however, came under fire for how it lobbied the city.

Sinking Ship approached the city about building the playground in January, but did not register as a lobbyist. It also appears that city staff did not ask if the company had registered.

The company will not face sanctions, according to the city's integrity commissioner. Instead, it is allowed to now register as a lobbyist, albeit late.

In a memo, City Manager Steve Kanellakos said he has asked staff to review the lobbyist registry and staff code of conduct.

Kids unveiled structures they built for the Ontario and Quebec sections of the playground Thursday as TV crews filmed them playing with them for the first time.

"We haven't done anything that we haven't done in the past 33 playground builds that we've done so we've always done partnerships with cities across Ontario and as you can see it's all about the community and the volunteers and the kids," said Renata Lopez, the show's producer.

"So we just did a similar proposal here in Ottawa so we try to focus on all the positive support."

Season four of the Giver program is expected to air next spring.

Tenant summit to call for landlord licensing program

Tenants fed up with insect infestations, leaky basements and mouldy ceilings will gather at city hall Saturday to call for a new landlord licensing program.

Social justice group ACORN Ottawa will launch its Healthy Homes Platform at its tenant summit between noon and 4 p.m.

The group has several demands, but what it really wants is a more enforceable system to hold multi-residential landlords to account when repairs and maintenance are neglected.

"It feels like no one's out there helping tenants and protecting them," said ACORN chairman Blaine Cameron.

A renter himself, he's dealt with chronic cockroach problems, and as a wheelchair user has been stuck in his apartment for days while the building's broken elevator was out of order.

He said the city's bylaw officers currently have a lot of "wiggle room" when they respond to property standard complaints.

Licensing landlords would allow the city to conduct annual inspections at all apartment buildings, and impose fines if repairs weren't done within a mandated timeframe, Cameron said. Non-compliant landlords would be listed on the city's website.

Cameron said the city-run program would be revenue neutral, charging a per-unit licensing fee.

Toronto's council is already heading down this path, having voted in June to host more public consultations and come back with a draft bylaw this fall.

Planners estimate Toronto's program would cost about $3.5 million annually to run, with a $12 to $15 per-unit licensing fee. Landlords have said those costs would be passed on to the tenants.

Locally, Rideau-Vanier Coun. Mathieu Fleury plans to speak at the summit along with Kitchissippi Coun. Jeff Leiper, but Fleury said he's not entirely on board with a city-wide licensing program — at least, not yet.

He instead has proposed a pilot in Sandy Hill, where absentee landlord issues are longstanding.

A big problem, Fleury said, is tenant turnover: right now when a tenant complains to the city, that complaint is void as soon as the tenant moves out. It doesn't get followed up unless the new tenant makes the same complaint again. EMMA JACKSON/METRO

'My heart just goes out to that little girl'

Lucie Edwardson
Metro | Calgary

In rows of four, police officers in fluorescent vests combed through ankle-high grass and chest high fields of canola in a small town northeast of Calgary in a search for evidence in the disappearance of Taliyah Marsman.

Insp. Don Coleman said police expanded their search to the rural area after receiving information indicating a man they took into custody in the case late Wednesday night, had been spotted there briefly in the preceding days.

"We have information the individual we have in custody was in that area for a brief period of time so we're looking for anything that might be related," he said.

Coleman said police had only found one item of interest, but aren't sure if it is related yet.

"The only thing I know that was found was a stuffed animal of sorts, but we have no idea if that related to this or not," he said. "It's a large area and there are probably several things out there that we may or may not know where they've come from."

The people of the town of Delacour said they were hopeful five-year-old Taliyah, who has been the subject of an Amber Alert for 48 hours, would be found.

Margaret Orr took a search of her own property, underneath trees and in the tall grass after seeing HAWCS overhead.

"I have to admit I keep calling her name hoping that I will hear something or see something, but nothing so far," Orr said.

"I've got little grandchildren — five, eight and 10 — so my heart just goes out to that little girl feeling all alone, or probably cold. I don't know... I just wish we could find her safe."

HEALTH CARE

Expand treatment for depression: Study

David P. Ball
Metro | Vancouver

Here's a depressing statistic: one in every 20 Canadians has the symptoms of major depression.

But even worse, fewer than half of them actually get even the most minimal treatment for the condition, according to a new study in the Canadian Journal of Psychiatry.

Its author Joseph Puyat, a researcher at the Centre for Health Evaluation and Outcome Sciences, examined data from Statistics Canada as well as B.C.'s medical billing records and found a huge gap between people's mental health and getting the help they need.

"People have suspected that we could do so much more to provide support and service," said the doctoral candidate at the University of British Columbia's school of population and public health. "But I didn't realize the magnitude or extent of the gap.

"We found that about 47 per cent of people diagnosable with depression are not getting adequate treatment."

When it comes to mental health, Canada's public system Medicare only covers psychiatrists and physicians — not psychologists, psychotherapists or counsellors.

Puyat said many front-line doctors either lack the time or aren't trained to offer therapy, while psychiatrists often have long waitlists.

"Antidepressants and counselling or psychotherapy are the first line of treatment for depression," Puyat said. "But if the treatment preferred is prohibitive, (patients) may forgo treatment altogether, which could lead to the worsening of symptoms."

Although those who can afford treatment can pay out-of-pocket to see a psychologist or therapist, financial constraints mean that for 80 to 90 per cent of patients with depression symptoms, a family doctor remains the primary care provided.

AUGMENTED REALITY

Police warn against playing Pokémon Go while on move

Police forces across Canada are warning of the risks involved in playing augmented reality games such as Pokémon Go as reports mount of people getting injured or landing in trouble as they play the wildly popular game.

The cellphone-based game sends players into the real world to search for digital monsters known as Pokémon, who appear on screen when users hold up their iPhones or Android devices in various locations at various times.

While not officially released in Canada yet, many residents have found workarounds to access the game that's become a blockbuster hit since launching in the United States, Australia and New Zealand last week.

Police forces, however, are worried about the game luring people into potentially dangerous situations and are cautioning players to use their common sense.

In Quebec City, police said two officers suffered minor injuries when a car they observed driving strangely reversed into their cruiser in a parking lot.

"The driver said 'I'm sorry, I was playing Pokémon Go,'" said Const. Nancy Roussel, who said police are calling on players to be aware of their surroundings.

"Be careful, watch out, even if you are in a car, on your feet or on a bicycle, be careful and watch

Be careful, watch out, even if you are in a car, on your feet or on a bicycle, be careful and watch where you're going. Const. Nancy Roussel where you're going, please."

Every time the Pokémon Go app is opened, a warning from game maker Niantic pops up, telling players to be aware of their surroundings. Players must also agree to fine print saying they cannot enter private property without permission.

There's also a disclaimer that says Niantic is not liable for any property damage, injuries or deaths that result while playing.

But despite the warnings, some people playing the game have wandered into private yards, driveways, cemeteries and, in one U.S. case, even an off-limits police parking lot in search of the app's cartoon monsters.

Some police forces have also been employing the hashtag #DontCatchAndDrive as players roam community streets.

"Please do not look for #Pokémon while driving. If you've gotta catch 'em all, do so safely. #DontCatchAndDrive," tweeted Edmonton police.

Winnipeg police and Manitoba RCMP sent out similar missives, urging players to be responsible. South of the border, police in the U.S. have cautioned players that trespassers could get arrested or worse, especially if they cross paths with an armed property owner. THE CANADIAN PRESS

RESEARCH

Study finds religious people view less porn

Jeremy Simes
For Metro | Calgary

As a religious man who has occasionally watched porn, Kyler Rasmussen wanted to learn more about how going to church may have affected his upbringing.

On Wednesday, University of Calgary researchers outlined a study that suggests young people who attend religious services are less likely to view porn.

Rasmussen, the lead author of the study, said the increase in porn consumption as adolescents age isn't as drastic among young people who attend religious services.

He said the reason behind that is largely due to morals that can be developed by community members who go to church.

"Just sitting in a pew and listening to a pastor speak is probably not the most important aspect of it," he said. "What's probably more important is that you're internalizing what you're hearing, that you are able to take that into your life and care about it."

The study, conducted with data collected between 2003 and 2008 that surveyed young people ages 13 to 24, found that porn consumption spikes with age, especially among men.

The data obtained for the study was obtained from the National Study of Youth and Religion, which was spearheaded by researchers in the United States.

Alex Bierman, co-author of the study, said porn has a number of unhealthy images that could hamper the development of a healthy sexuality.

"I think the issue is that there is often a large history of misogyny in porn," he said. "Sexual practices are commonly depicted that many people would not regularly engage on. The main issue is adolescents are learning and creating these practices that are perceived to be normal and expected."

Americans fear their options

The vast majority of Americans say they are afraid of at least one of the two major candidates — Hillary Clinton or Donald Trump — winning the White House, a remarkable finding that reflects an unsettled nation unhappy with its choice.

Eighty-one per cent of Americans say they would feel afraid following the election of one of the two polarizing politicians, according to a new Associated Press-GfK poll. That includes a quarter who say it doesn't matter who wins: they're scared of both.

Three-quarters of voters say their pick for president is motivated by a desire to cast their Election Day ballot against Clinton or Trump, more than those who say they're voting for the candidate who shares their positions on the issues or is the most qualified to hold the office.

Said Dennis Fernandez, 67, of Florence, Ariz.: "If Hillary Clinton won, I'd probably consider suicide. I'm definitely not a fan."

And Lawrence James, 55, of Durham, N.C., said: "If Trump wins, well, we've already checked out Malta and New Zealand. I'm just not comfortable that he's not going to make rushed, uninformed decisions."

On the eve of the summer's political conventions, at which the general election campaign officially begins, the latest AP-GfK findings underscore the deep sense of unease that is sharpening the political divide in America and shaping an already nasty race for president.

+ IN NUMBERS

The poll found Americans hold negative opinions of both candidates.

■ Fifty-seven per cent have an unfavourable view of Clinton. Sixty-three per cent have a negative view of Trump.

■ Fifty-six per cent of Americans said they would feel afraid and 48 per cent say they'd feel regret if Trump wins the White House. Just 22 per cent said they'd be proud and 26 per cent excited should America pick Trump on election day.

■ Clinton doesn't fare better: If elected president, 48 per cent say they would be afraid of her and 46 per cent say they would feel regretful. Only 27 per cent of Americans would be proud of that choice, and 26 per cent would be excited.

'A scene of horror'

NICE, FRANCE

Truck ploughs through Bastille Day revellers, killing dozens

A truck drove onto the sidewalk and plowed through a crowd of Bastille Day revellers who'd gathered to watch fireworks in the French resort city of Nice late Thursday in what some officials and eyewitnesses described as a deliberate attack.

The president of the Nice region said at least 75 people were killed.

Sylvie Toffin, a press officer with the local prefecture, said that the truck ran over people on a "long trip" down the sidewalk near Nice's Palais de la

Mediterranee, a building that fronts the beach.

She called the incident "an attack."

Nice regional president Eric Ciotti said on France Info radio that, "it's a scene of horror" and gave a figure of 60 dead. The reported figure later rose to 75.

Nice prosecutor Jean-Michel Prette said bodies were strewn about along the roadway.

However, he stopped short of using the word attack, while acknowledging that "it has many ingredients of an attack that allow us to think that."

Wassim Bouhlel, a Nice native who spoke to the AP nearby, said that he saw a truck drive into the crowd.

"There was carnage on the road," Bouhlel said. "Bodies everywhere."

I saw bodies flying like bowling pins.... Heard noises, cries that I will never forget. Damien Allemand

The president of the Provence Alpes Cote d'Azur regional council, which includes Nice, said the truck was loaded with arms and grenades and the driver was killed by police. Christian Estrosi told BFM TV that "the driver fired on the crowd, according to the police who killed him."

Bouhlel said he witnessed the man emerge with a gun and start shooting.

It was not immediately clear who would have been behind this, but France has recently seen a spate of dramatic assaults by jihadist groups, including Daesh, which straddles

Iraq and Syria.

Writing online, Nice Matin journalist Damien Allemand, who was at the waterside, said the fireworks display had finished and the crowd had got up to leave when they heard a noise and cries.

"A fraction of a second later, an enormous white truck came along at a crazy speed, turning the wheel to mow down the maximum number of people," he said.

"I saw bodies flying like bowling pins along its route. Heard noises, cries that I will never forget."

B.C. Premier Christy Clark tweeted that the incident is just horrible.

"Thinking of all those involved and their families," Clark tweeted.

EUROPE

New government signals PM May is serious about Brexit

British Prime Minister Theresa May. AFP/GETTY IMAGES

Theresa May wanted Britain to stay in the European Union, but the government she unveiled Thursday leaves little doubt that Britain's new prime minister intends to fulfil voters' instructions and take it out of the 28-nation bloc.

May has appointed leading euroskeptics — including the unpredictable Boris Johnson and the formidable David Davis — to top international jobs in a cabinet that sweeps away many members of predecessor David Cameron's administration.

When she was running for the Conservative leadership, May promised that "Brexit means Brexit," and her appointments of Johnson, Davis and arch-euroskeptic Trade Secretary Liam Fox signal to EU leaders that, no matter what her own feelings, she will not be watering down Britain's commitment to leaving the EU.

Johnson, Britain's new foreign secretary, said Thursday it was an opportunity to be seized — "reshaping Britain's global profile and identity as a great global player."

On her first full day in office, May dismantled Cameron's affluent metropolitan clique, dubbed the "Notting Hill set" after the former prime minister's trendy West London neighbourhood.

Gone were Cameron allies including ex-Treasury chief George Osborne, Cameron's friend and neighbour and like him the product of an elite private school.

Gone, too, was Michael Gove, the justice secretary who many Tories believe betrayed former ally Johnson by running for Conservative leader himself.

Gove's replacement, Justice

Secretary Liz Truss, and the new Education Secretary Justine Greening both attended state schools — as did May herself.

The appointment of Johnson, London's popular former mayor, as foreign secretary caused some consternation around the world.

Johnson's certainly not the obvious choice for Britain's top diplomat. He is internationally famous — but for rumpled eccentricity, Latin aphorisms and distinctly undiplomatic gaffes throughout his career.

INVESTING

Firms trying to appeal to sense of social responsibility

Several start-ups in the financial technology sector have unveiled products or services in recent months that attempt to court millennials by appealing to their sense of social responsibility.

Online investment adviser WealthSimple launched a socially responsible portfolio about three months ago, and since then roughly 10 per cent of the robo-adviser's clients have signed up for that option, says founder and CEO Michael Katchen.

Socially responsible investing, or ethical investing, is the marriage of personal ethics with finance, and it's been growing in popularity in recent years, a trend believed to be fuelled partly by the values of millennial investors.

According to a report released last year by the Responsible Investment Association, more than $1 trillion of assets in Canada were being managed using at least one responsible investing strategy as of Dec. 31, 2013. That's up from $600 billion two years earlier.

A global study released by research firm Nielsen last year found that 73 per cent of the millennials it surveyed are willing to pay more for brands that are sustainable.

We wanted to be at the forefront of that on the investing side.

Isaac Schweigert

"Socially responsible portfolios really try and avoid investing in companies that don't have a good environmental, social or corporate governance record," says Isaac Schweigert, a portfolio manager and chief compliance officer at ModernAdvisor.

The online investment manager, or robo-adviser, launched early this year and offers socially responsible portfolios.

"We are based in Vancouver, which tends to be ahead of the curve on a lot of the socially responsible and ethical investing, and just social causes in general, so we wanted to be at the forefront of that on the investing side," Schweigert says.

One of the challenges with offering ethical investing options is that everyone's definition of an ethical investment is different, says Katchen.

"It's a massively subjective term," he says.

"Some people don't want to invest in tobacco or alcohol companies or gaming companies. Some people don't care about that but they just want to make sure that there's a board that represents diversity, or invest in the environment. So, first of all you have to come up with some definition of what this means, and also understand that it's not going to satisfy everyone out there, because it's impossible."

It isn't just investment managers that are trying to woo millennial customers with products focused on social responsibility.

Merchant Advance Capital, a technology-based online small business lender, launched a so-called impact loan earlier this month, offering lower borrowing rates to entrepreneurs who are looking to make a positive impact on their community or the environment.

Nintendo unveiling a Classic

Andrew Fifield
Metro | Toronto

Nintendo has announced a release date for their next console, but it's not the enigmatic NX.

Instead, old school gamers can rejoice with the news that a mini version of the classic Nintendo Entertainment System is hitting shelves this fall, with a 30-game package that includes gems like Castlevania, Final Fantasy, Metroid and the first entries from the Mario Bros. and Zelda franchises.

The new hot NES will come equipped a replica of the original controller and an HDMI cable to plug the console directly into your TV. Two-player functionality will be available, and a second controller can be purchased for $12.99.

The console is geared exclusively to classic gaming, so players shouldn't expect any online connectivity.

The NES Classic hits stores on Nov. 11 for $79.99.

Unlike Pokémon GO, Canadians won't have to wait any longer than our neighbours to pick up the revamp.

Emojis of women at work approved

Women professionals will soon be better represented in emoji form. Google said Thursday that the Unicode Consortium, which controls emoji standards, has agreed to add 11 new emojis in response to Google's proposal in May to create a set of emojis "with a goal of highlighting the diversity of women's careers and empowering girls everywhere."

Among the new emoji characters is a doctor, a scientist, a farmer and a welder. The characters are available in male forms as well and can be customized for skin tone.

Google's original proposal said women — and those under 30 in particular — are the most frequent users of emojis.

The new emojis could be available on smartphones before the end of the year.

"We hope these updates help make emoji just a little more representative of the millions of people around the world who use them," Google said.

SCIENCE SAYS Weekend, July 15-17, 2016

THE POWER PLANT OF THE FUTURE

Swiss scientists at the Laboratory of Nanoscale Biology have designed the teeny-tiniest power plant ever. They published their experiment this week in the journal Nature. They harnessed osmosis — the natural movement of molecules from high concentration to low concentration across a membrane — to generate electricity.

HOW IT WORKS

The scientists built a tiny device with two fluid-filled compartments, one with a high concentration of a dissolved salt and the other with a low concentration. The fluids are separated by a membrane just three atoms thick made of a compound called molybdenum disulfide.

1. The membrane has a tiny hole called a nanopore, just big enough for the salt ions to pass through. The pore is negatively charged.
2. The positive salt ions pass through the pore, moving from the high-concentration compartment to the low one. The pore repels negative ions.
3. So, negative charges build up on one side of the device and positive charges on the other. That movement of charges is electricity! Researchers said the resulting electric power was enough to run a tiny transistor.

THE POTENTIAL

In real life, fresh water comes in contact with salt water every day in estuaries, where rivers meet oceans. If giant membranes could be installed at the juncture, capturing the osmotic power of salt moving from high concentration to low concentration, the result could be a reliable source of renewable energy. Unlike the wind (doesn't always blow) or the sun (doesn't always shine) the ocean is always there.

CITIZEN SCIENTIST by Genna Buck

Is hate part of human nature?

Everyone is a little bit racist. It's scientifically proven, right? — D.B., Winnipeg

Yes, the evidence suggests most people, at least unconsciously, have a not-so-nice view of marginalized groups like African-Americans and gay people. Social scientists call this implicit bias, and there's significant controversy over how it's measured.

A popular way to measure bias, including racism, is an implicit association test (IAT). It's a computer game that works something like this: You sort images (of black or white people) and words (like "great" or "horrible") into two categories, "Black/Unpleasant" and "White/Pleasant." Then the categories switch to "Black/Pleasant" and "White/Unpleasant."

If you're faster at sorting when black is paired with unpleasant, the program gauges it's more automatic for you to think that way. Therefore, you have a higher degree of implicit bias against black people. In a popular IAT available online from Harvard, 70 per cent of participants are biased against black people.

Though it's been used for decades, many experts question if the IAT is valid (if it really measures what it's supposed to) and reliable (if its results are consistent).

I tried a little reliability test of my own. I did the Harvard IAT online. It found I have "moderate" preference for white people over black. Two hours later, I tried again, throwing in a confounding factor: blasting an upbeat song. Only "slightly" racist this time.

I'm skeptical of IAT, and not because it called me racist (I live in this racist culture of ours after all). I have a hunch that it's used not because it's the best metric, but because it's straightforward and cheap. Naturally, it's a gross oversimplification of racism: a messy, centuries-old phenomenon.

For studying complicated stuff, nothing beats long-term qualitative research like in-depth interviews and anthropological studies. It's expensive, but it's irreplaceable.

POSITIVE NEWS

Good news for loved ones of people infected with HIV: As long as your partner is taking their meds as directed, you're going to be OK. That's according to a large study of 888 couples with one HIV+ partner and one who is not infected. The study found not one new case of HIV among the negative partners, though they were regularly having sex without condoms. All the HIV patients were taking anti-retroviral therapy, and the levels of virus in their blood were at or near undetectable levels. Though 11 of the negative people caught HIV, none of them got it from their partner.

The mystery of a great muse

IN FOCUS

Paul Feig, Melissa McCarthy make magic in movies

Richard Crouse
For Metro Canada

Consider the muse.

Alfred Hitchcock made three of his greatest films with Grace Kelly and tried to lure her back to the big screen long after she retired. Martin Scorsese and Leonardo DiCaprio have a seemingly unbreakable cinematic bond and the world of movies would be far less interesting if Werner Herzog and Klaus Kinski had never met. John Ford and John Wayne inspired one another to do their best work and Tim Burton and Johnny Depp's shared eccentricities gave us unforgettable nights at the multiplex.

Muses inspire their directors to aspire to new heights, to push the limits of their creativity.

Add another to the list: Melissa McCarthy.

Over the course of four films — including this weekend's Ghostbusters — she has upped director Paul Feig's game and in turn he gave her the roles that broke her out of the TV sidekick

Melissa McCarthy, foreground, has found big movie success with director Paul Feig. Her next outing is Ghostbusters in which she shares the screen with talks with Kate McKinnon, Kristen Wiig and Leslie Jones. CONTRIBUTED treadmill and turned her into a big screen star. "It's not even like we go, 'We've got to do the next movie together,'" Feig says. "It's just that suddenly the next movie will pop up and I'm like, 'You know who would be great for this?' So it's funny that people think we have an agenda to keep doing this."

Agenda or not, their creative chemistry is undeniable. Feig describes McCarthy's audition for the first film they made together, Bridesmaids, as a "religious moment." She was less sure. "The whole ride home from the audition," she says, "I was thinking, 'I got too weird. Should I turn the car around and do that cheesy actor thing of I can do it better! Give me another shot!'"

The director cast her in the scene-stealing role of Megan — imagine a feral, female Guy Fieri — and it was her flashpoint.

Her wonderfully weird performance, complete with sexual hijinks and an explosive bout of diarrhea — "It's coming out of me like lava!" — stole the show out from under other, better-known stars like Kristen Wiig — and earned her an Oscar nomination.

Next up for the dynamic duo was The Heat, an odd couple, buddy cop movie set in Boston co-starring Sandra Bullock.

McCarthy plays a tough-talking street cop who forms an unlikely alliance with the uptight Sandra Bullock to bring down a murderous drug dealer.

The role riffed on McCarthy's signature character, the aggressive but damaged comedic persona. "I've played a lot of characters who are very vocal, very aggressive," she told me in 2014. "For the women I've played there is a reason why they are so ballsy and it is nice when you see the crack in the veneer and you realize, 'It's part of their insecurity. They stay loud so nobody yells at them.'"

Feig knows when to let McCarthy off the leash — there are some wild slapstick scenes here — but he also knows when to pull her back and let the script do the work.

This week McCarthy headlines Feig's all-female Ghostbusters reboot alongside Bridesmaids co-star Kristen Wiig.

Will that be their final collaboration? Don't count on it.

Feig is reportedly writing a Spy sequel as we speak.

"She's so good," he says, "and we just really have the same sense of humour."

GENDER ISSUES

Scientists say they can relate to roles in Ghostbusters

Kris Abel
For Metro Canada

Ghostbusters is the first adventure led by women from the field of science and technology. I asked astrophysicist Rachel Ward-Maxwell from the Ontario Science Centre and creative technologist Alex Leitch, co-founder of Site 3 coLaboratory, to attend a screening. They loved it.

Leitch: I loved the original Ghostbusters. It was great. As an adult? It's not the movie that it was when I was a kid. This movie is the movie I really wanted it to be. It means a lot to see yourself represented onscreen. The way that everybody related to each other really reminds me strongly of my circle of friends from the MakerSpace scene.

Ward-Maxwell: Having films where you see women in science, in particular in this film a team of women scientists, and it's emphasized quite often in the film that they are scientists and they believe in the scientific method. It's like watching a super hero movie, like The Avengers, but it is a woman, who is a scientist, who is rescuing another woman, who is also a scientist. It's just so...mind-boggling. I hope it becomes the norm.

Leitch: I tried to buy the glasses that Kate McKinnon wears throughout the movie last summer, because I weld things and they are delightful. I really associate strongly with the characters who run towards danger and run towards trouble and machines. In my previous career I have definitely built crazy-light beam weapons that are incredibly dangerous (laughs).

Ward-Maxwell: I could really relate to Kristen's character. At the beginning, she's working towards her tenure at Columbia University, she's a theoretical physicist, she's practicing her lecture in an empty classroom, trying to present herself in a way that is authoritative to her students. I do have some experience working with super computers, which are cool, and also some pretty powerful telescopes.

Leitch: I really believe that this movie, at the very least, will give us a brand new crop of amazing Makers who are women and friendly to women, both of which really matter a lot. I am optimistic it will get us an amazing generation of engineers.

Ward-Maxwell: I definitely think we're going to see lots of young girls dressing up like Ghostbusters, which is about time. I think it's going to be awesome, I think it can be very aspirational, not just for young girls, everybody, to see not just a great cast of women, but a great cast, not just a great group of female characters, but a great group of characters be on a wonderful adventure. They talk about how they're physicists. For me, as a physicist, that's something very rare. I think that might allow young girls to take an interest.

Networks keep losing ground in Emmy nods

NOMINATIONS

New platforms continue to produce winning shows

Power-and-blood fantasy saga Game of Thrones ruled the Emmy Award nominations Thursday with a leading 23 bids, including best drama, while a real-life epic of murder and celebrity, The People v. O.J. Simpson, was close behind with 22 nods.

Game of Thrones, which won a record 12 Emmys last fall including best drama, gets the chance to claim its second top award. Veep, last year's best comedy series winner, also will get another shot at holding office and, with 17 nominations, was the comedy leader.

Breakthrough nominations include a best comedy series nod for sophomore black-ish, which brought the African-American family sitcom back to network TV, with bids as well for its stars, Anthony Anderson — who helped announce the awards live on Thursday and read his show's name with glee — and his co-star Tracee Ellis Ross.

"I'm on cloud nine right now," Anderson said afterward. "When hope becomes reality, that's what it is. I was just a nine-year-old kid growing up in Compton, California, with a dream and this is the dream that I had."

They were among a number of black actors recognized by TV academy voters, who have started to keep pace with TV's growing diversity — in sharp contrast to moviedom's Academy Awards, which were slammed as "Oscars So White" this year.

Viola Davis, the How to Get Away with Murder star who last year became the first woman of colour to win a best drama actress trophy, was nominated again. So was Empire star Taraji P. Henson.

Each of the major acting categories included at least one minority nominee. But there were no major nods for the stars of Fresh Off the Boat or other Asian-American actors, or for Latinos, which has been a recurrent Emmy pattern.

Networks have reason for concern as well. In the increasingly crowded TV universe, traditional broadcasts again lost Emmy ground to emerging platforms, including streaming services Netflix and Amazon, both of which boosted their tallies.

Game of Thrones and Mr. Robot will compete with Better Call Saul, Homeland, House of Cards, The Americans and Downton

Game of Thrones, above, ruled the Emmy nominations with 23 nods, while black-ish, below, scored a best comedy series nod and two nods for its stars. CONTRIBUTED Abbey, the last a nod for its farewell season. But the final season of The Good Wife was not recognized, and star Julianna Margulies also was snubbed.

For Stephen Colbert, it was the inaugural season of his CBS late-night show that was overlooked, while network colleague James Corden earned a best variety talk series bid for his Late Late Show.

Aziz Ansari received a lead comedy acting bid for his series Master of None, a first for an Indian-American actor, and the show received a best comedy series nomination. Rami Malek, of Egyptian descent, earned a top drama acting nod for his role as a renegade hacker in another freshman, Mr. Robot, which also will compete for drama honours.

The Americans, which gained in attention last season, also earned bids for its stars, Keri Russell and Matthew Rhys.

Besides Russell, Davis and Henson, lead drama actress bids went to Claire Danes for Homeland and Tatiana Maslany for Orphan Black.

Malek and Rhys will be competing with Kevin Spacey for House of Cards, Kyle Chandler for Bloodline, Bob Odenkirk for Better Call Saul and Liev Schreiber for Ray Donovan.

The ensemble cast of Game of Thrones found leading bids elusive. Peter Dinklage, named last year's best supporting actor, will defend his title, with a nod also going to Kit Harington, who plays fan favourite Jon Snow. Emilia Clarke, Lena Headey and Maisie Williams earned supporting actress bids in a year that the show's female characters gained the upper hand.

On the comedy side, Veep, black-ish and Master of None will tussle for the trophy with five-time champ Modern Family, Transparent, Silicon Valley and Unbreakable Kimmy Schmidt.

A top acting nod for Veep star Julia Louis-Dreyfus, who plays a U.S. vice-president now elevated to the Oval Office, gives her the chance to score her fifth consecutive win and set a record.

Black-ish star Anderson, who got his second nod, will be competing with last year's winner, Jeffrey Tambor of Transparent, along with Ansari, Will Forte for The Last Man on Earth, William H. Macy for Shameless and Thomas Middleditch for Silicon Valley.

The 68th prime-time Emmy show will be broadcast live on

CANADIAN FILM

The Dark Stranger an 'elevated' thriller

Steve Gow
For Metro Canada

For a Canadian filmmaker, just getting a movie made is an accomplishment in itself. So first-time director Chris Trebilcock is thrilled about his cinematic debut — even if he's also a bit wary.

"A purist part of me would long to go back to the '70s and '80s where you could release a film in the theatre and it could be there for weeks slowly building word-of-mouth. Now it's gone in a week if it doesn't have a huge opening weekend," said the Toronto-based filmmaker behind The Dark Stranger — an indie summer drama that lurks in the shadows of box-office behemoths such as Ghostbusters.

But while his nail-biter about a young artist tortured by the eponymous spirit that surges from fiction into real life will surely see a successful digital release later this month, The Dark Stranger does debut in theatres today — a triumph for the humble David Cronenberg-inspired thriller.

"I just started with this idea of a young woman in a house," said Trebilcock about his original idea evolving into something much more tangible.

"It morphed into this story about an artist dealing with depression, and what if the depression actually had a form — it was an actual adversary, a person."

Trebilcock admits it was a hard sell for financiers, but the premise soon caught on as an exciting "elevated genre" film — an important distinction for the young director.

"Without it sounding too syrupy, I hope it also carries a message that all people have it within themselves to defeat their dark strangers," added Trebilcock.

One of the keys to overcoming that terrorizing dark stranger was casting The Killing's Katie Findlay, whose nuanced performance is not only gaining much attention but promotes the long tradition of strong female protagonists in the male-dominated thriller genre.

"(Filmmaker) Brian de Palma once said that having a female protagonist in a thriller — you care about them more than if it was a male protagonist presumably because our assumptions are women are more vulnerable than men — although that perception is rapidly changing," said Trebilcock.

"When I wrote it, it wasn't any type of calculation — it just felt right that it was a female protagonist."

NOT A TOURIST | A letter from Mark Stachiew in Iceland

Journey to the centre

The view from atop Iceland’s mighty Langjökull glacier on a sunny day is spectacular, but we’ve come to see what inside.

People have been coming to the top of the Long Glacier (a translation of its Icelandic name) on snowmobile tours for a long time, but some entrepreneurs thought it would be great if they could tunnel into the ice so people could see the beauty hidden within this massive glacier in the Highlands of Iceland.

After years of research and red tape, the dream became a reality in 2014 when half a kilometre of tunnels were bored into the ice and they started bringing people inside. The year-round attraction has proven so popular that last year they were closed for just 14 days — and that’s only because the weather was bad.

The weather must have been apocalyptic because visitors ride to the mountaintop aboard towering, eight-wheeled trucks that were once used as missile carriers by NATO. These motorized beasts normally navigate the snowy route to the top with ease.

After descending from these impressive vehicles, we spend some time admiring the view of the surrounding mountains, then drop into the glacier, an experience something like going into a mineshaft. Everyone puts crampons over their shoes to avoid slipping on the slushy floor. The temperature inside is at the freezing point. It’s cool, but not uncomfortable.

The glacier walls are marked with horizontal lines. Like the rings of a tree, these lines show the age of the glacier.

Each line represents a year of ice deposit. Some years there is less ice, some years there is more and some are outlined in black, indicating the presence of volcanic ash. The most recent of these was the massive 2010 eruption of the volcano with the unpronounceable name, Eyjafjallajökull.

With coloured lights to guide the way, the tunnels and rooms carved into the glacier are ethereally beautiful. As we explore, our guide explains the history and science behind the ice sheet and uses it as a teaching moment about global warming.

Langjökull glacier has been sitting astride these mountains for 4,000 years, but our guide explains that it is shrinking and could be gone in less than 150 years if current warming trends continue.

“You’re on vacation now so you don’t have to think about that. Think about it when you get home,” he said.

After walking into the beating heart of a glacier, it’s hard not to.

HÚH! A THUNDERCLAP FOR MYSTICAL ICELAND

Now that Iceland's spellbinding Viking football cheer has been adopted the world over and its Canada-born first lady Eliza Reid is capturing praise for her intelligence and style, there's no better time to visit. Here are some of the country's most astounding experiences.

WORDS AND PHOTOS MELITA KUBURAS/METRO

Feel the White Noise

If Reykjavik is where you plan to stay, a day trip to West Iceland and the Snaefellsnes Peninsula will inspire a post-modern feeling right out of Don DeLillo's White Noise: "It's like I'm in a car commercial," you'll find yourself thinking, as the icecap-covered volcano looms above. Renting a car to visit iconic sights closer to the city such as Geysir (seen right) is much more fun than taking bus tours, which can also be costly. Plus, having a car gives adventurers the freedom to go chasing after lesser-known waterfalls — they are everywhere — and take hikes to see the ones that are more difficult to get to.

Hot, hot geo-location

Iceland's tectonic plates and active volcanoes will intrigue even those with little interest in geomorphology. That's because the island's geothermal activity translates into beauty you can see, feel and taste.

Rye bread can be baked overnight by burying it in the ground where geo-heated water cooks it, as seen here at the Laugarvatn Fontana spa.

While the Blue Lagoon is quite touristy, it's worth as a stop on the way to or from Keflavik International Airport to soak stiff muscles and a tired brain. For a cheaper spa day, visit any public swimming pool as most are geothermally heated, and will only cost about $10 for a visit.

Whale steak and moldy cheese

Maybe it's the sea salt, the ocean air, or the careful way that the rich ingredients are assembled, but food is really delicious in Iceland. For a taste of local specialties visit Ostabudin in Reykjavik — if you're not venturesome enough to try their grilled minke whale steak, opt for a charcuterie platter of smoked goose meat, mutton, moldy cheeses and cured horse.

A place called Smakk Barinn offers Icelandic tapas served in a row of four or six little jars. One woman says she ordered all of the seafood items, while her partner got all six of the meat dishes — a smart ordering strategy. Develop your own.

ious toe tappin' in store for you here. With 2016 being Calgary's Year of Music, you can start by exploring the new home of the National Music Centre, Studio Bell.

Themed to feel more like a festival than a museum, this $191 million project features various stages. Everything from the science of music to a celebration of Canadian moments in song complete with iconic items (such as the shades from Corey Hart's Sunglasses at Night) and interactive installations take the spotlight.

For your fill of live music acts, you'll find venues peppered throughout Calgary's urban sprawl, such as Local 510, but now there's also the newly established Music Mile, which stretches through the East Village and Inglewood.

Here you can catch close to two dozen live music events (of a variety of genres) from Thursday to Sunday, including music fests, such as X-Fest, at Fort Calgary, and laid-back jam sessions at mainstays like Ironwood Stage & Grill and The Blues Can.

A boon for brewery buffs
On 17th Avenue at National, there are more than 70 beers on draught, including ones from local entrepreneurs.

Tool Shed Brewing, for example, is the brainchild of two former IT and satellite communication guys whose business started with your basic home-brewing system in one of their backyards.

Also on tap is Last Best Brewing & Distilling, the fourth iteration of the Bearhill Brewing Family of Breweries, which was launched back in 2002 by a then 22-year-old Socrates Korogonas with the $2.5 million he made through winning the grand prize in the BC Cancer Foundation's Lifestyles Lottery.

National also serve brews from the small new kid on the block: The Dandy Brewing Company.

Dandy was started by Matt Gaetz, who has a background in the liquor industry, with three 20-something-year-old friends (Ben Leon, a teacher, Dylan Nosal, a chef, and Derek Waghray, who'd just completed a chemistry degree). They got into the beer game when Alberta changed their liquor laws at the end of 2013, which eliminated the minimum production capacity of 500,000 litres. Their plans to go beyond nano-brewery size are on track: this March, the last of the four guys went full-time with the company.

They recently added an eight-tap tasting room where you can sample their small-batch brews and this year Dandy will likely triple their production compared to 2015 with upwards of 50 different styles.

Mickelson lips out his chance for first-ever 62 at a major

Phil Mickelson was 16 feet away from a place in history he wouldn't have to share with anyone.

Fans watched from a rooftop balcony. Royal Troon members strained to see out the window from the clubhouse behind the 18th green. Jack Nicklaus usually doesn't watch golf on TV, but he made an exception for this moment.

In 436 majors held over the last 156 years, no one had ever shot 62.

That's still the case. By a fraction of an inch.

"I want to cry," Mickelson said.

Mickelson pointed his putter toward the hole and was ready to step into history Thursday in the British Open when his birdie putt turned sharply to the right at the mouth of the hole, just enough to ride the edge around the back of the cup and sit there, teasing him.

"You made a beautiful read and putt on that last hole but got absolutely stone-cold robbed," Nicklaus said in a message on Facebook.

Mickelson plopped his hand on his forehead in disbelief. His caddie, Jim (Bones) Mackay, was so stunned that he fell over backward.

"It was one of the best rounds I've ever played ... and yet I want to shed a tear right now," Mickelson said. "That putt on 18 was an opportunity to do something historical. I knew it, and with a foot to go I thought I had done it. I saw that ball rolling right in the centre. I went to go get it. I had that surge of adrenalin that I had just shot 62, and then I had the heartbreak that I didn't."

No tears were necessary at Royal Troon, not after a round of 63 that was brilliant even by Lefty's standards, and certainly not after building a three-shot lead over Patrick Reed and Martin Kaymer on an ideal day by the Irish Sea.

Mickelson seized the moment with a birdie on the par-5 16th from a bunker short of the green, and a 4-iron to 15 feet for birdie on the par-3 17th to reach 8-under par. He knew no one had ever shot 62 in a major. He also knew he most likely would never get a chance like this.

"That would have been really something special," he said. "So to have that putt lip out, that's going to sting for a while."

Even with such a close call, Mickelson is in good company.

Nicklaus missed a putt just inside three feet for a 62 in the 1980 U.S. Open at Baltusrol. Greg Norman had to only two-putt from 30 feet for a 62 at Turnberry in the 1986 British Open and took three putts. Tiger Woods watched his 15-foot putt for 62 spin 270 degrees around the cup in the 2007 PGA Championship at Southern Hills. Nick Price's birdie putt for a 62 in the 1986 Masters dipped in and out of the cup. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Raptors finalize contracts for DeRozan, Sullinger

The Toronto Raptors have finalized the signing of guard DeMar DeRozan, bringing the all-star back to the only NBA team he has ever played for. The deal is reportedly for five years at $139 million US.

The Raptors also confirmed the signing of free-agent forward Jared Sullinger, using their $5.6-million mid-level exception on a one-year deal. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Former No. 1-ranked hurdler retires from sport

Hurdler Priscilla Lopes-Schliep announced her retirement from competitive sport on Thursday, capping a career that saw her win bronze at the 2008 Olympics and silver at the 2009 world championships.

The 33-year-old from Whitby, Ont., tried to switch to bobsled last fall.

RECIPE Fried Egg-Pizza

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh For Metro Canada

If you're looking for ease then eggs are your friend. Pizza is also your ally so this is basically dinner's version of your BFF.

Ready in

Prep time: 5 minutes
Total time: 25 minutes
Serves 2

Ingredients

- 2 pitas
- 1 cup passata (or tomato or pizza sauce)
- Salt and pepper
- 1 1/2 to 2 cups mozzarella, grated
- 1/4 cup crisply fried bacon, crumbled
- Few leaves of basil
- 2 eggs

Directions

1. Preheat the oven to 450 F. Place the pitas on a baking sheet. Pour tomato sauce on pitas and spread it around. Leave a little edge clear of sauce all the way around.

2. Sprinkle your cheese on each pita and push it slightly out the edges so you make a nest for your egg. Sprinkle basil and the bacon all around the edge of your cheese nest. Gently crack an egg in the middle.

3. Slide the cookie sheet carefully into the oven. Bake for about 15 to 20 minutes, depending on how done you like your eggs.

4. Use a spatula to move your egg pizza to a cutting board where you'll cut each pizza into four. Serve with slices of avocado, sour cream and a bit of salsa. Enjoy!

★ IT'S ALL IN THE STARS Your daily horoscope by Francis Drake

Aries March 21 - April 20
Your home routine will be interrupted today because small appliances might break down, or minor breakages could occur. Be patient with family members to avoid arguments.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
This is an accident-prone day for your sign. No question. Slow down and pay attention to everything you say and do. Be careful! Think before you speak or do anything.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
Something having to do with money, cash flow and your possessions will catch you off-guard today. Check your bank accounts. Count your change, and check your bills.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
Today is subject to sudden interruptions. The behavior of others might upset you. Almost certainly, your daily routine will change, which means you have to stay light on your feet.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
Today you feel restless. It's almost as if you need more air! Give yourself a chance to do something different and gently explore something new.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Your relations with a friend or a member of a group might upset you today. People are changing horses midstream; plans are going up in smoke. Hang in there!

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
A boss, parent or authority figure might do or say something that shocks you today. Don't quit your day job. Do not over-react. Give yourself time to have a sober second thought.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Travel plans will be cancelled, delayed or rescheduled today. Likewise, schedules with colleges, universities, publishing and the media will change.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Stay on top of your financial arrangements, especially anything to do with banking, inheritances and shared property. Something unexpected will arrive out of the blue.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
It's not easy to relate to others today, because they might just explode for some reason. Today is full of all kinds of disruptions and sudden arguments.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Allow extra time today, because your work routine will be interrupted for sure. Computer crashes, power outages, staff shortages and canceled meetings are just some examples.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
Parents should be vigilant today, because this is an accident-prone day for their kids. Meanwhile, it's also a rocky day for romance. Just smile and be sweet and understanding.
